HISTORY

TARTLE was intellectually conceived in 2015 and two years later founded in 2017 as a marketplace to help individuals regain control and earn financial gain from the data they create and share.

Since the early days of its life, TARTLE has evolved and adapted to the needs and desires of humanity. The focus and values have extended beyond data ownership and now reach far into the realm of creating positive impact through the sharing of data, and donating of earnings to causes that champion a people/planet focus.

Our journey will be one that is shared with humanity as we empower the lives of everyone across the globe, acting as a sherpa for every individual's own journey to data ownership, financial empowerment, self-responsibility, and global impact. TARTLE is actively empowering and uplifting human beings across 222 countries.

MISSION & VISION

TARTLE's mission is to elevate humanity through the sharing of data.

TARTLE has a vision of a world where complete and total knowledge is shared, and our most pressing problems that threaten the stability and existence of human beings are solved with data in a collective and collaborative effort across all nations and peoples.

About

Alexander McCaig

Alexander is a seasoned entrepreneur with extensive experience in business development, relationship management, risk management, consulting, and private equity.

Currently, he is leading the way for people all across the globe to find financial empowerment through data ownership and altruistic action of supporting major transit authorities.

Alexander successfully brought management and disparate unions of transit authorities to focus on the same common goal. His efforts delivered millions in cost savings, all while increasing safety and personnel training across the organizations.

Alexander helped with the founding of a wireless technology company, where he pioneered mass adoption of “rented” wifi space so that companies could buy digital ad space to cover the cost of public wifi in economically under-developed areas.

His second start-up endeavor was a nutraceutical product that mobilizes white blood cells in the body to help with the migration of phlegm and viruses out of the body.

Alexander brought the idea from inception to production, which included developing the supply chain, logistics, sourcing, brand, product design and manufacturing into a flexible business model.

Alexander is a National Champion Rower. He enjoys rock climbing, meditation, flying airplanes, non-fiction reading, trap shooting and vegetables.

About Jason Rigby

Currently is the owner of Rigby Digital, Host of ABQ Business Podcast, and co-Host with Alexander McCaig on Higher Density Living Podcast. He is a Book Collector, Macro Investor, and thriving in the beautiful sunny state of New Mexico with two dogs! Catch him on a mic or at the dog park.

Born in Jacksonville Florida to a southern baptist pastor's home in the deep south (lots of Bible, fried chicken, and gravy lol). Jason was raised in a strict Christian home and attended a religious private school. At the age of 8, Jason became a student of Philosophy which encompassed great literature, and discovered in High School that playing Basketball was an outlet for all his physical energy. Come 18, he went into The United States Marine Corps during global conflicts in Somalia, Bosnia, and Haiti. Jason served in the United States Military for 10 years at that time and eventually turned to a deeper calling to follow in the footsteps of his father and set out to start a church plant in Washington State.

He had early successes with an entrepreneurial spirit (according to the denominational standards) and building a sizable church, but internally was at battle with his intuition and knew that the religious dogma he preached every Sunday was in conflict with what he truly felt was the highest truth. Leaving the pastorate with the burnout of an exhausting schedule created instability and took its toll on his home life leading him to lose his marriage and family. At rock bottom, being homeless without a purpose, and having no hope Jason did the one thing that he never would have believed life could come to. Attempting suicide only to miraculously survive.

With a new lease on life and struggling to turn himself around, he lived in his car while landing a sales job and then worked up to being a Sales Director of the organization. Once again he had everything, being successful in the worldly standards of consumerism and the American Dream, but knew that there was more than what we see, feel, and desire externally. There was this still small voice of authenticity welling up inside of him to accept his higher self, and at that moment, Jason became a student of TARTLE as the Chief Consciousness Marketing Officer.
